Effect of deflazacort on plasma aldosterone and renin levels in asthmatic children. The glucocorticoid deflazacort is the steroidal oxime derivative of hydrocortisone acetate, which is used for treatment of children with moderate and severe persistent asthma. The influence of this drug on the level of aldosterone and/or renin is not known. To determine the effect of deflazacort on aldosterone and renin levels in the plasma of asthmatic children. Twenty-eight steroid-naive asthmatic children were treated orally with deflazacort (0.5 mg/kg/day) for four weeks. Aldosterone and renin levels were measured before and after treatment. Deflazacort significantly decreased aldosterone and increased renin levels. A significant negative correlation was found between changes in plasma aldosterone levels and body weight ( $r = -0.84$ ,  $P < 0.05$ ). The goal of this project is to study new approaches to the treatment of low-grade prostate cancer. The hypothesis that prostate cancer progression is driven by fibroblast growth factor receptor (FGFR) signaling and that FGFR is a therapeutic target in the treatment of prostate cancer has been shown in several studies. However, the role of FGFR in cancer progression has been difficult to investigate due to the presence of several other FGFR-mediated pathways in human cells. Here we use molecular genetic approaches to study the FGFR signaling in prostate cancer cells and the role of FGFR in prostate cancer. It is known that prostate cancer can display FGFR genetic alterations or FGFR overexpression. Thus, we have deleted or overexpressed specific FGFR genes in human prostate cancer cells. In addition, we have studied the levels of expression of each FGFR gene in prostate cancer cell lines to examine the possibility that combined therapy targeting multiple FGFR pathways could be more effective.

Wednesday, March 26, 2007 So, the dyeing of the hair is on -it's a beautiful pale jade green with a bit of a silver shimmer. Although the color I wanted appears, it still takes about 3 days to settle in and is quite hard to maintain. I'm learning to love it, though. :) Since I'm still trying to figure out the whole blusher thing, my hair needs a bit of a freshening up. My goody two shoes look to the right in the pic. The fourth quarter of last year started on a strong note for Graco, as its net sales rose 12.9%, with a particularly strong 29.8% increase in its baby market sales, which advanced 8.9%. The company's net income jumped 35.1% to $32.3 million. On an adjusted EBITDA basis, Graco posted a small but promising 6.2% increase, with an 8.6% increase in its baby market to $93.5 million, while its gross profit increased 8.2% to $144.7 million. What investors should consider with Graco The company's large base has contributed to a strong earnings story, but insurance offers the most intriguing part of the business for investors.
